

Fall 2017 Brown Bag Lecture Series

When? Select Thursdays, 12:15-1:30

Where? Faculty Commons, 116 Pearson Hall

What? Informal presentations of diversity-related research

Why? Learn, discuss, and build collaborations

All are invited to these informal talks. Beverages provided; bring your own lunch. Please join us on the following dates:

October 5, 2017	April Veness, Geography
	"The Importance of Place: a pilot project comparing UD students' experiences on various campuses"
October 19, 2017	Joseph Pritchett, Franklin & Marshall University
	"Supporting Religious Diversity and Interfaith Cooperation at the University of Delaware"
November 16, 2017	Elizabeth Soslau and Nicholas Bell, School of Education
	"Re-thinking the student teaching curriculum: Noting and addressing bias in the classroom"

The mission of the Center for the Study of Diversity (CSD) is to promote academic research and scholarship that facilitate dialogues about and understanding of the social and academic impact of diversity.

The Center brings a broadly interdisciplinary focus to its activities, projects, programs, and publications on research and analysis, training, public scholarship, community projects, and information dissemination. We are housed within the College of Arts & Sciences.

Fall 2017 Brown Bag Lecture Series

When? Select Thursdays, 12:15-1:30

Where? Faculty Commons, 116 Pearson Hall

What? Informal presentations of diversity-related research

Why? Learn, discuss, and build collaborations

DIVERSITY

All are invited to these informal talks. Beverages provided; bring your own lunch. Please join us on the following dates:

October 5, 2017	April Veness, Geography
	"The Importance of Place: a pilot project comparing UD students' experiences on various campuses"
October 19, 2017	Joseph Pritchett, Franklin & Marshall University
	"Supporting Religious Diversity and Interfaith Cooperation at the University of Delaware"
November 16, 2017	Elizabeth Soslau and Nicholas Bell, School of Education
	"Re-thinking the student teaching curriculum: Noting and addressing bias in the classroom"

The mission of the Center for the Study of Diversity (CSD) is to promote academic research and scholarship that facilitate dialogues about and understanding of the social and academic impact of diversity.

The Center brings a broadly interdisciplinary focus to its activities, projects, programs, and publications on research and analysis, training, public scholarship, community projects, and information dissemination. We are housed within the College of Arts & Sciences.

